

Drug Law Blog

Drug Law, Policy and Politics in California, the Ninth Circuit, and the United States.

ABOUT THIS BLOG

HOME

Bio and contact info

KEY ARTICLES

How to Make Drugs Boring, In Five Simple Steps

Gonzales v. Raich One Year Later

Recent Coverage of the Fentanyl + Heroin Crisis

Search this blog:

OTHER WEBSITES

Drug Policy and News

Drug WarRant

Drug War Chronicle

Rehabology

Sifting The Haystack

The Drug Update

Grits for Breakfast

Hit and Run

Hemp Evolution

Sterling on Justice and Drugs

Students for Sensible Drug Policy

Marijuana Policy Project

Money Up Front

Drug Policy Alliance

Americans for Safe Access

Erowid

Pain Relief Network

Reload

NORML

Drop the Rock

« ASA Sues DHS, FDA Re Statements On Medical Marijuana

| Main

February 23, 2007

Starfish, Spiders, and Drug Policy Reform

I recently read Ori Brafman and Rod Beckstrom's book The Starfish and the Spider: The Unstoppable Power of Leaderless Organizations, which is all about decentralized organizational models and the challenges they pose to top-down, hierarchical models of organization.

It's an interesting book that maps onto a lot of contemporary political movements like al Qaeda and the ELF in addition to being relevant to organizations like Wikipedia and Napster. I was reminded of it this week by two stories in the drug policy reform arena.

The first was ASA's suit against the federal government under the Data Quality Act. It's a challenge to the way the government has represented the science around medical marijuana. The government persistently denies that marijuana has any medicinal value, and ASA is suggesting that this is an intentional distortion of empirical evidence -- a move that is both ingenious from a legal standpoint and brilliant from a PR point of view, since it generates a considerable amount of press about the possibility that the federal government is warping the facts.

The second was the critique that John Holowatch created of the ONDCP anti-drug ad called "Pete's Couch." It's a video that can't be posted as a "comment" to the ONDCP videos on YouTube, because the ONDCP doesn't allow comments or ratings of any sort. But Holloway's video is already spreading quickly through the blogosphere, and there's little that the ONDCP can do to prevent it.

These are quintessentially starfish approaches to policy work, as Brafman and Beckstrom use that term. In other words, they were generated autonomously by ASA and Holowatch, respectively. There was no order from any "director" of the drug reform movement, because there isn't

RSS FE

ARCHIV

February 2006

January 2007

December 2006

November 2006

October 2006

August 2006

July 2006

June 2006

May 2006

April 2006

CATEG

4th Amendm

Abigail Alliar

Alcohol

Ambien

Antidepressa

Asset Forfeit

Attorneys an

Bausch & Lor

Celebrex

Cesamet

Commerce C

Conspiracy

Crack

Custody

Danco Labor:

DEA

Dextromethc

Criminal Law More Generally
Crim Prof Blog
Sentencing Law and Policy Blog
Correctional Association of New York
Los Angeles Defense Atty. Allison Margolin
California Law (Courts & Legislature)
California Appellate Report
Electric Lawyer
Cal Biz Lit
Around The Capitol
FDA Related
FDA News
FDA Dockets Management
Law Enforcement Blogs
Crime and Consequences
The ONDCP's Pushing Back Blog
PacoVilla's CCPOA Blog
Law Enforcement Against Prohibition Foreign
Transform Drug Policy Foundation (UK)
The Australian Drug Blog

any director of the drug reform movement. Also, they were flanking maneuvers that compensated for obstacles put up by the federal government. Legal challenges to medical marijuana based on federalism have failed, so ASA is turning to a new approach. The ONDCP doesn't allow comments on its ads, so Holowatch created an independent commentary that includes the ad inside itself.

It's smart. It's slippery. And if these strategies don't work, others will be forthcoming.

The movement around drug policy reform is very starfishy. Nobody pays them to write for Daily Kos. Nobody funds Pete at Drug WarRant except through his tip jar. Nobody tells ASA what its priorities ought to be. Nobody tells Students for Sensible Drug Policy or the Drug Policy Alliance what they have to focus on this year, or next. Moreover, there are certainly splits in the movement between people who come at this question from a very libertarian perspective and people who have more of a public health or criminal justice-reform orientation. It's a diverse, scattered group of people. And yet, there is a sense, broadly speaking, of a shared mission.

For the most part, drug policy reformers have had only limited success so far. Medical marijuana laws in 11 states, yes. Prop. 36 in California, yes. But many other goals are still out of reach. And yet, as the Internet becomes more of a ubiquitous presence in contemporary life, the starfishy qualities of drug policy work become more and more effective at challenging a position asserted by centralized government authority. The ASA suit and the Holowatch commentary work so well precisely because they call into question the authority and legitimacy of this centralized position.

This is why the ONDCP chose the "victim"-oriented name "Pushing Back" for its blog. That agency, which has massive institutional advantages on its side, including the weight of pretty much every federal law and the backing of the Justice Department, nevertheless recognizes that the Internet's decentralized model of information dissemination is a real challenge to its authority. This is also, I take it, the reason why the Department of Health Services, when asked by the San Francisco Chronicle about ASA's suit, declined to comment and referred a reporter to the Food and Drug

Doctors and Drugs
Drug Testing
Due Process
DUI
Ephedrine
FDA
Fen-Phen
Fentanyl
First Amendr
Fosamax
Gonzales v. I
Hearsay
Hemp
Heroin
Ibuprofen Informants
Intent International
Johnson & Jc
Ketamine
Ketek
Law
Ma Huang
Marijuana Marketing
MDMA
Medical Mari
Merck
Methadone
Methamphet
Mifeprex
Obstruction
Ortho Evra
Oxycontin

Administration's April 2006 statement that federal evaluations have found 'no sound scientific studies supported medical use of marijuana.'"

Is that a good response? No. It's a lame response. But when it becomes evident that your authority is based primarily on your own assertion of authoritativeness, repeating yourself over and over again starts to seem like a good idea.

---

Posted by Alex on February 23, 2007 in Drugs | Permalink

---

TrackBack

TrackBack URL for this entry:

<http://www.typepad.com/t/trackback/16355332>

Listed below are links to weblogs that reference Starfish, Spiders, and Drug Policy Reform:

---

Comments

and to accelerate the rate of change and make it easy for anyone predisposed to help, i tracked down all of the government's data, turned it into pictures and provide the context that makes it easy to see how everything has been blown way out of proportion to reality.

truth is power: <http://www.drugwarstats.com>

---

Posted by: brian bennett | February 24, 2007 at 07:46 AM

---

Post a comment

If you have a TypeKey or TypePad account, please Sign In

Name:

Email Address:

URL:

Remember personal info?

Comments:

Paxil
Phillip Morris
Plan B
Police Condu
Prescribing P
Prison Litigat
Prop. 36
Qualified Im Quantities
Religious Use
Renagel
ReNu
Rush Limbau
Salvia
Sanofi-Avent
Schools Sentencing
Suboxone
Tenofovir
Tobacco
Viagra
Vioxx
Wiretapping
Wyeth

Preview

Post